

Writing

Writing

"Writing" is the process of using symbols (letters of the alphabet, punctuation and spaces) to communicate thoughts, ideas, emotions, feelings and experiences in a readable form.

Writing Process

- Pre-writing: Thinking about a topic, brain-storming (generating ideas) and planning.
- Drafting/Free writing: Quickly putting ideas, feelings, emotions or experiences on paper.
- Revising: Reworking on the organisation of ideas and other details.
- Editing: Correcting spelling, grammar, capitalization and punctuation.
- Evaluating: Reflecting (thinking) and assessing what has been written.
- Publishing: Sharing with others

Writing Strategies

- 1. Make an outline

Making an outline is an essential part of writing. Note down the points you want to discuss and stick to that plan. Noting down the main points to be discussed is actually the outline.

2. Focus on the Opening Paragraph

The first sentence you write should intrigue the readers. You can use short sentences for building up their interest. Do not give away the topic too soon. Let the readers wonder what it is that you want to say.

Remember that an introductory paragraph should inform the readers about the topic you are exploring.

3. Blend in your personal experience

There is no better way to build an emotional bond with readers than sharing a personal experience with them. You can combine the facts from your real life with fiction to make the story more vibrant. It is easier to be convincing when you write about something you know very well. We all have our personal perception of life but there are many things that overlap. This is one of the ways you can connect with a reader.

4. Avoid Using Long Sentences

Sincerity is what readers value the most. Do not pretend to be someone else by using complicated terms and expressions. Long fancy words are not helpful in getting your message across. The main feature of a really good content is its clarity.

Make it easy for your readers to jump from one sentence to another without struggling to understand the definition of the words you use.

5. Know Your Readers

Before you start writing, decide who is your perfect reader. Who is this person you are writing for?

This technique will help you decide what tone and style of writing would be appropriate. Some writers believe that it is not about the readers but expressing their own world of emotions via the art of writing. But there always has to be someone to appreciate your efforts.

6. Master the Art of Storytelling

Telling a good story is the right way to win the hearts of the audience. Not only does it keep them interested but also makes it easy to draw conclusions.

Any concept or idea becomes simple when you provide the context. Be prepared that learning how to use this technique may take you some time.

7. Use Testimonials

It is always a good idea to support your opinion using a quote of someone people trust. It must be a person whose views are well respected. This is the way our brain works.

If something sounds suspicious, we need proofs. Insert the quotes from reputable sources to make your conclusions sound more convincing.

8. Be Clear and Specific

There is nothing more annoying than an author who can't make himself/herself clear.

The worst thing that can happen after reading a text is to have just one question in your head: "What have I just read?"

If you don't know how to express your thoughts in a comprehensive manner, you have to practice a lot. This is the key ability a good writer needs to have.

9. Write regularly

Practice makes a man perfect. The saying is as old as time but still, makes a lot of sense. Only by writing every day can you polish the skills.

It is like going to a gym. Once you start skipping the training sessions, your muscles become weak.

Practice regularly and try to discover new aspects of creative writing.

10. Enjoy the Writing Process

There is nothing wrong about wanting readers to like your writing.

But if this is the only motivation you have, it won't get you very far.

Enjoy the process itself not the results.

Only if you have the feeling of satisfaction from what you do, will you be able to become good at it.

11. Read as Much as You Can

The more you know about the world around you, the more profound and interesting your texts will be.

Besides, it is a great way to find the necessary inspiration.