Interviewing

Interviewing(Employer or Company Side)

- Collecting Information from People.
- You collect information, or find answers to your questions, in a number of ways. You can interview, survey, observe, test, and read.
- The employment interview is the method employers use to decide whether to offer a candidate a position.
- One effective way to acquire information is to conduct an information interview

Goals of Interviewing

- Your goal is to discover the appropriate facts from a person who knows them.
- To conduct an effective interview, you must prepare carefully, maintain a
- professional attitude, be willing to probe, and record answers.

1. Prepare Carefully

- To prepare carefully, inform yourself beforehand about your topic.
- Read background material, and list several questions you think will produce helpful answers
- Brainstorms Questions
- What aspect of your current workstation is not ideal? Is it something that can be easily remedied? Is there an alternative solution?

2. Maintain a Professional Attitude

- Schedule an appointment for the interview, explaining why you need to find out what the respondent knows.
- Make sure she or he knows that the answers you seek are important.
- Most people are happy to answer questions for people who treat their answers seriously.

3. Be Willing to Probe

- Most people know more than they reveal in their initial answers, so you must be able to get at the material that's left unsaid.
- Four common probing strategies are as follows:
 - ▶ Ask open-ended questions.
 - ▶ Use the echo technique.
 - ▶ Reformulate.
 - ▶ Ask for a process description.

4. Record the Answers

- Put the questions in a word processing document—like MS Word leaving a space to record notes and answers.
- Ask for repeat of not get and written down.
- After a session, review your notes to clarify them so they will be meaningful later and to discover any unclear points about which you must ask more questions.

Employment interview (Candidate side)

- The employment interview is the method employers use to decide whether to offer a candidate a position.
- Usually the candidate talks to one or more people who have the authority to offer a position.

To interview successfully, you need to prepare well, use social tact, perform well, ask questions, and understand the job offer

1. Prepare Well

- To prepare well, investigate the company and analyze how you can contribute to it
- To investigate the company, consult their website, read their Facebook page, perhaps sign up to follow them on Twitter.
- For a more in-depth look, read annual reports, descriptions in Moody's, items from Facts on File, F&S Index, Wall Street Journal Index, or Corporate Report Fact Bank.

Prepare Well

- After you have analyzed the company, assess what you have to offer. Answer these questions:
 - ▶ What contributions can you make to the company?
 - ▶ How do your specific skills and strengths fit into its activities or philosophy?
 - ▶ How can you further your career goals with this company?

2. Use Social Tact

- Means to behave professionally and in an appropriate manner.
- Acting too lightly or too intensely are both incorrect.
- First impressions are extremely important; many interviewers make up their minds early in the interview.

Use Social Tact

- Follow a few common sense guidelines:
- ▶ Shake hands firmly.
- ▶ Dress professionally, as you would on the job.
- ▶ Arrive on time.
- ▶ Use proper grammar and enunciation.
- ▶ Watch your body language. For instance, sit appropriately; don't lounge or slouch in your chair.
- ▶ Find out and use the interviewers' names.

3. Perform Well

- To answer the questions directly and clearly.
- Interviewers want to know about your skills.
- Be willing to talk about yourself and your achievements; if you respond honestly to questions, your answers will not seem like bragging.

Perform Well

- For a successful interview, follow these guidelines:
- Be yourself. Getting a job based on a false impression usually ends badly.
- Answer the question asked.
- Be honest. If you don't know the answer, say so.
- If you don't understand a question, ask the interviewer to repeat or clarify it.
- In your answers, include facts about your experience to show how you will fit into the company

4. Ask Questions

- You have the right to ask questions at an interview.
- Make sure you have addressed all pertinent issues.
- If no one has explained the necessary items to you, ask about them:

4. Ask Questions

- Necessary Points to be Cleared before Leaving
 - ▶ Methods of on-the-job training
 - ▶ Your job responsibilities
 - ▶ Types of support available—from secretarial to facilities to pursuit of more education
 - ▶ Possibility and probability of promotion
 - ▶ Policies about relocating, including whether you get a promotion when you relocate and whether refusing to relocate will hurt your chances for promotion
 - ▶ Salary and fringe benefits—at least a salary range, whether you receive medical benefits, and who pays for them

5. Understand the Offer

- Usually a company will offer the position—with a salary and starting date— either at the end of the interview or within a few days.
- You have the right to request a reasonable amount of time to consider the offer
- If you get another offer from a second company at a higher salary, you have the right to inform the first company and to ask whether they can meet that salary.
- Usually you accept the offer verbally and sign a contract within a few days.
- This is a pleasant moment.
